

Editorial Purpose

The Technology Learning Center is a nonprofit organization with no commercial interests. This site is meant to educate and inform the general public about our mission to serve the community.

In creating this website, we use a great deal of original photographs and video. In most cases, and whenever possible, releases were obtained. In other instances, photographs were purchased for use under license from the copyright owner. We are especially sensitive about using photos of minors and are careful to protect their identity.

Some photos, quotes and copy were found in images and articles published on the Internet where copyright information wasn't noted or available. In those instances, the use of this material was considered in the public domain and used on this site for editorial purposes.

There are instances where corporate logos are used to illustrate and or to suggest corporate philanthropy. The use of these logos does not imply the participation of these companies or their endorsement of our program. The use of these logos on our site is for editorial purposes only. We will gladly remove any logo upon request.

If by chance we unintentionally used copyrighted material without permission, we'd like to apologize and ask that you consider our noble efforts to teach kids and allow TLC to use this material on this site. Naturally, we will remove and/or secure written permission for any material upon written request. We appreciate your understanding.